

Path of memories

This memory monument allows visitors to experience the history of silk production in Baan khrua nua within an abandoned house. The design is created around the circulation of moving through each stage throughout the process of silk production; from boiling the silk threads until weaving it into a piece of fabric. The visitors get to experience what happened there in the past and can experience what it was like through doing the same actions. After reaching the final stage of the design: weaving, the visitors can then wrap the fabric around the memory monument to continue the process of collecting “pieces of memories”.
